The Gloucester OLD SPOT

Welcome to The Gloucester Old Spot, a place where great food, friendly service, and a love for local ingredients come together. Nestled just outside of Cheltenham in Pitts Elm, The Gloucester Old Spot has a rich history nearly as delightful as its food.

The site has boasted an inn since 1755, then in the possession of the Piff family, who had recordedly owned the surrounding land since 1676. During its formative years, the inn was known as The Old White Swan. Until 1824, when it was last owned and occupied by a Piff ancestor, The Old White Swan was a central coaching post for those travelling to Tewkesbury, Cheltenham, and Gloucester via horses. For these weary travellers, it was the majestic elm tree sheltering the front of the inn that marked this rural and remote resting place. Planted by the Piff family, the elm was described in 1800 by one such traveller, Reverend John Skinner, as the ‘monarch of the grove’.

Measuring over twenty feet in width, for over one hundred years this tree was as much a part of the land as the inn itself. However, due to land ownership disputes between the Lords of Hardwicke and Boddington, in 1845 the elm was felled, leaving the inn missing an integral aspect of its facade. Over the course of the next century, the inn underwent a multitude of transformations. Arguably its most important came in November 1979 when then-owner Martin Earl decided to change the name of the pub to its current moniker, The Gloucester Old Spot. Inspired by Gloucestershire’s rare-breed pigs, he famously invited local breeders Charles and Monica Martell to bring actual pigs to the unveiling of the pub’s new name and signage. The Gloucester Old Spot was bought by Simon and Kate Daws in 2010, who at the time also owned The Royal Oak in Prestbury. After returning The Gloucester Old Spot to its historical status of a free house in 2012, Simon and Kate set about transforming all aspects of their tireless work in expanding the kitchen, revamping the garden, and installing a baronial-esque dining room brought them fruitful rewards. thegloucesteroldspot.co.uk

These include features in both The Good Pub Guide and the Michelin Guide to Pubs, as well as a rating as one of the Top 100 UK Pub Gardens by Tom Parker-Bowles.

However, these achievements were not solo ventures, but greatly aided by the work of the pub’s current owners, Shawn and Maria Bound, who came from The Royal Oak to The Gloucester Old Spot in 2010 with Simon and Kate. After becoming directors in 2019, and creating their own vision for the future of the pub, they took the reins as owners in the summer of 2024, supported by the same long-standing team who had worked under Simon and Kate. Shawn and Maria have quickly set to work in continuing the development of the business, particularly with the installation of their unique and highly popular Smoke House and the sharpening of the pub’s focus on utilising local suppliers wherever possible in both its food and beverage menus.

Whilst there is no longer an elm tree, the Gloucestershire flag stands proudly in front of the pub today, not only welcoming Shawn and Maria’s valued customers to this haven of the county but symbolising the whole team’s dedication to championing all that the region has to offer.

We’re passionate about using the best local ingredients, working closely with Gloucestershire farmers, cheesemakers, and brewers to bring you fresh, seasonal flavours in every dish.
